Description

Cyber-threats to the civil aviation system are considered a major concern. Cyber-attacks against civil aviation operations could potentially be catastrophic with significant casualties, disruption to civil aviation services, and/or damage to critical infrastructure. Equally endangered are airlines, airports and air traffic management. The “ESCP High Level Meeting on Cybersecurity in Civil Aviation 2018” in Toulouse (France) on 14th and 15th November 2018 will bring together States, industry, partners and other key players to raise awareness of the threats, as well as discuss and develop practical and sustainable policies, approaches and measures to protect against them and mitigate their impact.

Target audience

High level representatives from EU institutions, National Aviation Authorities, and other key state organisations involved in cybersecurity as well as high representatives from aviation industry.
